REFERENCES

¹ In respect of new bank cards issued from 1 November 2009 the card issuance fee is a one-off fee which is charged per bank card during the term of the bank card related legal relationship only when the first bank card (main card/supplementary card) is issued.

2 Redeemable issuance fee

The issuance fee of the main card and the related supplementary card functioning as a credit card the application for which is accepted by ERSTE BANK HUNGARY ZRT for processing from 2 April 2012 is redeemable as follows:

- a) If the amount of any purchase made with the relevant main card or supplementary card functioning as a credit card and entered as a book-record to the account from the issuance of the card reaches the amount of the issuance fee charged to the credit account, the Bank credits an amount equivalent to the issuance fee to the credit account that belongs to the credit card on the billing date of the credit card.
- b) The redeemable issuance fee applies to both the main and supplementary card provided that the bank examines the amount of purchases separately per bank card based on which the amount equivalent to the issuance fee is credited separately per bank card.
- c) The issuance fee may be redeemed in the first three calendar months following the issuance of the relevant main or supplementary card. The date of issuance is the date when the issuance fee is charged to the credit account, which is indicated in the account statement.
- d) The amount equivalent to the issuance fee is credited on the first billing date following the book-entry of the purchase as a result of which the total of the purchases made from the issuance of the card reaches the amount of the issuance fee.
- e) The basis of examination of the purchases made with the credit card is the date of book-entry of the purchase, so on the relevant billing date the purchases the book-entry of which have been completed by the relevant billing date of the Credit Card will be examined. The crediting is made under the legal title 'purchase redemption'.
- f) A purchase shall mean the following transactions executed with a credit card and entered into the books: 1) settlement of goods and services through a POS terminal at a commercial acceptance place (card acceptance device) or otherwise, 2) settlement of goods and services through the internet; 3) topping up credit for mobile phones through ATMs offering this service.
- g) Only purchases that are executed from the overdraft facility can be redeemed, consequently when making the allowance for redeemable issuance fee available, the bank will not take into account purchases that are entered into the accounts in respect of a credit account that is overpaid.
- h) Betting / gambling and similar transactions executed on the POS of a commercial acceptance place or on the internet, transactions for cash withdrawals and debiting of interests and fees will not qualify as purchase.
- i) For the determination of eligibility for purchase redemption and its amount, the calculations of the Bank shall govern.
- j) In the case of transactions about which the Account Holder complains, the Bank reserves the right to use its sole discretion. Based on the findings of the investigation triggered by the complaint the Bank decides whether any rectification is needed in relation to the transaction concerned.
- k) The Bank will not credit an amount equivalent to the issuance fee for customers with credit cards in respect of whom the Bank terminated the credit card contract before the indicated time of crediting or the Main Cardholder initiated the termination of the credit card contract prior to the billing date on which the total amount of purchases made from the date of issuance of the card reaches the amount of the issuance fee.

3 The Bank charges the annual card fee annually on the anniversary of the first card production, on the last business day of the month of anniversary. If before the due date of the annual card fee the card is reproduced or replaced, the due date of the annual card fee will not change and the date on which it is charged will be the last business day of the month of anniversary of the first card production.

4 For applications until 1 November 2020: The issuance fee and annual card fee of the main card and related supplementary card belonging to the Erste Platinum Credit Card are HUF 0 for Private Banking customers during the promotion.
